Angela's experience of Pathways to Work

Angela is CFS/ME sufferer and member of our group. She recently went through a government scheme designed to get people with disabilities back to work and off incapacity benefit. The scheme is called Pathways to Work, and Angela wanted to share her experience in case there are others who have to go through the same process.

After a period of absence from work due to her CFS/ME, Angela went on incapacity benefit. She then went back to work for about six months, became ill and went on incapacity benefit again. A few months later she was called to an interview at the Job Centre and this was where her Pathways to Work journey began. Once she had been interviewed, she was asked to attend a support organisation called the Shaw Trust a UK charity who helps disabled and disadvantaged people to prepare for work, find jobs and live more independently. When she went to the trust she had another interview which required a lot of her personal details, including her bank account. This made her feel exposed and vulnerable. The questions also covered her aims and expectations, her skills, interests and all aspects about her condition, including her medication. Once all this information was collected a printout was produced, and she had to sign it to confirm the information she gave was correct. Angela worried about this, especially because no explanation was given about why the information was being collected or for what purpose it was being used.

As a result of the interview, she was advised to go on an exercise programme at the gym! This was despite Angela making it clear that she couldn't cope with this in addition to work and home life as well. The advisor then explored other avenues such as massage at the local college, as it was more affordable. He also recommended a Condition Management Programme, which used Cognitive Behavioural Therapy (CBT) to help individuals. This was presented to Angela despite the fact that she had been on the NHS expert patient programme, and had already undergone a course of CBT.

It was natural that Angela was anxious about her situation, because if she refused their help, she could lose her benefit. So, she began a course on the Condition Management Programme, which she felt was yet another stress on top of her normal life. In fact this was too much for her as the journey into Bury was taxing enough in addition to the complex nature of the sessions, which also included homework.

At her second interview she was cleared to stop this programme. Shortly afterwards, her doctor said he was willing to write a letter explaining the best way Angela should be treated. Although the letter was not required, she continued to attend a few more interviews. She then took early retirement and this signalled the end of her experience.

The Pathways to Work programme is tailored to each person's individual need. However, Angela recommends that anyone going through the process takes two steps to help themselves. Firstly, when attending the interviews you should go with a friend who can support and represent you. This will help prevent feelings such as, "I have absolutely no control over this situation". Secondly, she felt that help from the GP, or consultant, was essential as the people in this programme were more likely to be less qualified when recommending treatments and solutions about how to improve the condition. Angela says, "If your GP or consultant can get involved, then this could influence their recommendations for a better pathway back to work".

Living with “me” Dad – by the 12 year old son of one of our members

Many people would think living with a parent with chronic fatigue syndrome is extremely difficult but not in this case.

I would expect to be doing more house chores or having less support when I am doing something important or needing help with my homework in school. However my dad is there for mostly everything.

Sometimes he is a little bit tired and sometimes I do have to help more but it isn't a big factor. At certain points, I worry that my dad is too tired and is being too optimistic when he is trying to achieve a time-consuming task.

Every now and then I do have to tell my dad to have a rest or to stop doing chores that I should be doing at 12 years old.

There are also times when I should be more independent and not ask my parents to help me with things I should be able to do. I usually ask for help on the computer (maybe downloading software or ordering something for me).

I sometimes ask for help at the wrong times when my dad is exhausted from a hard day's work. At 12, sometimes I don't use enough logic to realise that my dad is unable to do something that I want him to do now. This is also a slight lack of maturity.

My dad doesn't usually get angry. If I'm not there to help when he needs it then he won't be too happy.

I also think that my dad is lucky to be married to my mum. My mum does most of the cooking and cleaning in the house which leaves my dad with not much work to do. When my mum is tired, my dad instantly comes to help even though he maybe tired as well. I have to stop him and end up doing the work with my sister.

I think that I take advantage out of what my dad can do with Chronic Fatigue. I should be caring more and helping more as a family member. I am lucky that Chronic Fatigue isn't affecting my dad too badly and I am classified as a lucky child to have such a hardworking dad.

Living with “me” Dad – by the 14 year old daughter of one of our members

My Dad has chronic fatigue. There are times when I forget this and times when it is an obvious matter, and I am now used to my dad having good and bad days.

At the moment I feel my Dad has many more good days than bad. On a bad day he will alert us all and tell us he is feeling low. When this occurs, I try my best to help with the daily household chores, and usually if I help to do the small things in the house it can make a big difference to my Dad's mood.

Dad's chronic fatigue does not make a huge difference to the family dynamics as we are all used to the fact that Dad gets tired easily and should not exert himself. When he is tired we all try our best to help and just let him lie down and rest.

I think that having a Mum and job that is so supportive to dad's illness helps greatly. Firstly Mum understands the extent of dad's problem and can help where necessary. Also Dad says himself that he is lucky that his job is flexible and understands his illness to. For example when he was in no fit state to work a couple of years ago he was still being paid and was given as much time as he needed to try and recover. Now as Dad works at home he is able to go for regular rests during the day to help keep him ok.

I think in order for my dad to recover he needs to help himself. He does not really understand his limits. More often than not my Dad takes on much more than he is capable of and it is up to Mum and I to remind him that he should stop doing this task now and maybe to have a rest. If we do not prompt him Dad would keep working until he is exhausted and in no fit state for anything.

My dad is definitely becoming more controlled and understanding how to deal and live with the illness that he unfortunately has. By reading books on time management etc. he has been able to start helping himself get back to normal.

POSTERS:

Twice a year we send our posters & leaflets to the 71 libraries in the surrounding area, in order to try and reach out to as many people as possible who might need us. We would like to be able to do the same with GP surgeries, but there are just too many for us to tackle, so we would like to ask for your help. We have enclosed a poster and would be grateful if you could ask your local surgery to display it. If you would like any extra posters for chemists/shops/community centres etc., we would be happy to send more copies to you.

Many thanks to Bricks & Motor Insurance, for arranging an excellent deal for our group's insurance.

Kevin Houghton (General Manager) says: "We are delighted to arrange cover for your group, and we were happy to do this at cost. Our services are extended to all members who will receive my personal attention and an extra discount."

A note from our librarian:

When I took over the group's library, my first major task was to do a full inventory of all our books, CDs and DVDs. What fun that was, especially with a delinquent kitten as my assistant! The plan is to circulate a list of the library's contents to our members, but unfortunately there are still some items that we've been unable to trace.

First though, I'd like to thank everyone who contacted me and told me about, or returned, items they had borrowed. That made the job of cataloguing much easier. Thanks also to those people who have generously donated books and DVDs to our library.

Now I know I've pestered people already about missing items, but could you please check again that you haven't overlooked a book or disc. We want to buy in new publications and widen our range of information, so the fewer things we need to replace the better.

If there is a book or disc you would like to see in our library, please give us your suggestions. If you want to borrow an item that is currently on loan, let me know and I will be happy to reserve it for you.

Here is a list of the missing items:

We have heard from our friends at Benefits & Work, that a new shorter 4-page version of the DLA renewal form has recently been introduced. They warn us that people are being turned down after using this new short form and advise anyone who is sent one to consider using the old 50-page form in order to make sure they give enough detail about any changes to their condition. They are in the process of producing a guide to the new form and as soon as they do we will let you know and make it available to you.

Benefits & Work Guides

Our group is a member of www.benefitsandwork.co.uk, allowing us to access their fantastic guides to a range of benefits and disability related issues. The guides are created by a welfare rights expert and a barrister, drawing on their own in-depth knowledge plus use of the Freedom of Information Act. They are essential reading for anyone filling in a benefits application or renewal form, attending a medical, or faced with an appeal. The group's subscription allows us to make these guides available to our own members, so please look through the list below and if you need anything phone Dave on 05601 335037 or email dave@mesupportroup.co.uk.

Please note that some of the guides are very lengthy (up to 88 pages) and so it can work out rather expensive for us to print and post them. After each guide listed below, is the number of pages in brackets, to give you a rough idea what it costs us to print and post them to you, here are a few figures:

10 pages - £1.00	20 pages - £1.80	40 pages - £2.70
60 pages - £3.50	100 pages - £5.50	200 pages - £11.00

If possible please help us to keep costs down by providing an email address we can send them to, if you do not have internet access yourself, perhaps you have a friend or relative who could help out. Alternatively, if you go to one of our meetings, social groups, or yoga classes, you could pick them up from there and then return to us to be used again. We don't want anyone to miss out and will do our best to accommodate your needs, but perhaps if you do need us to post any of the longer guides to you (or several of the smaller ones), and you can afford to make a contribution towards the costs, it would be very much appreciated.
